Thought-provoking posts.Strengthened retinoic acid signaling by KIAA1199, the human homologue of mouse STRA6, contributes to malignant cell phenotype and poor prognosis in nasopharyngeal carcinoma. Nasopharyngeal carcinoma (NPC) is an epithelial cancer with high metastatic potential, which carries a high fatality rate. Recent evidence has shown that retinoic acid (RA) signaling plays critical roles in NPC. Here we examined the expression and biological roles of stefin A-related transporter/signal transducer 6 (STRA6), an RA transporter protein, and the KIAA1199, its mouse counterpart. STRA6 expression was significantly upregulated in NPC tumors, as compared with adjacent non-tumor tissues, both in a tumor tissue microarray and in primary tumors. STRA6 was predominantly located in the cell membrane of cancer cells. In immunohistochemical analyses, STRA6 was highly expressed in the head and neck squamous cell carcinoma (HNSCC) and primary NPC cells. Down-regulation of STRA6 using siRNA or anti-STRA6 antibody in nasopharyngeal carcinoma cells (CNE-1) markedly inhibited cellular proliferation, migration and invasion. Furthermore, knockdown of STRA6 in CNE-1 cells impaired their tumorigenicity in nude mice. Mechanistically, STRA6 bound to and activated its downstream target protein Ret. Additionally, STRA6 activated AP-1 transcription, which in turn increased its target gene expression. In a human tissue microarray of various tumor types including head and neck squamous cell carcinoma, immunohistochemistry of STRA6 correlated with its protein expression level and with its poor prognosis. In the mouse NPC tumor model, on the other hand, overexpression of STRA6 promoted the growth of tumors and the expression of invasion markers in the mouse NPC cells. These results suggest that the overexpression of STRA6 in NPC cells contributes to the malignant phenotype of the tumor cells and that down-regulation of STRA6 expression may represent a novel therapeutic strategy for the treatment of NPC.
